Carlswald Reservoir Project

R40.3m invested for a
10 Megalitre reservoir

Johannesburg's water infrastructure has long been under scrutiny, with crumbling pipes, frequent outages, and inadequate supply failing to meet the demands of a growing population.

The city's mismanagement and underinvestment have left residents frustrated, making the recent announcement of the Carlswald Reservoir—a R40.3 million, privately funded 10-megalitre project — both a beacon of hope and a point of contention.

While Joburg Water's Acting Managing Director, Ntshavheni Morero, hails the project as a critical step toward stabilizing water supply, the fact that it is entirely bankrolled by private developers raises important questions.

Is this a sustainable solution, or merely a stopgap that exposes deeper systemic failures?

WHICH SUBURBS WILL THIS RESERVOIR SUPPLY?

- Barbeque Downs extensions
 - Kyalami Park
 - Kyalami Heights
 - Kyalami AH
- Kyalami extensions
 - Beaulieu
- Blue Hills extensions
- Willaway extensions
- Glenferness AH extensions
 - Treesbank AH
 - Plooyville AH

Why it can work?

- ✓ Immediate relief for water shortages.
- ✓ No direct cost to the City.
- ✓ Faster Implementation from the private partners.
- ✓ Inspiring an increase in Private-Public Partnership

What don't we know?

- ? Who really benefits?
- ? Private Funds for Goodwill or Preferential treatment?
- ? Who will manage the new infrastructure?
- ? Will it commercialize the access to water?
- ? When will the existing infrastructure be prioritised to solve the apparent crisis?

The Carlswald Reservoir is a pragmatic, if imperfect, response to Johannesburg's water woes. It provides much-needed relief without immediate public expense, but it also underscores the city's inability to fund and manage its own infrastructure.
